

Attention Jotwell RSS Feed Readers

Author : A. Michael Froomkin

Date : November 17, 2015

This week Jotwell is having its first-ever fund-raiser. Regular visitors to the site probably already noticed a large yellow popup informing them of this fact, but people who get Jotwell via the RSS feed or by email will have been denied that experience. There is no reason for the hundreds of people who read us via the RSS feed—or by email—to be left out.

So here's the pitch: Please will you make a small donation to support this journal? All the faculty who write for and edit Jotwell do so for free, but even so, producing the journal is not costless: we need to pay for our server, for our student editors, and for various types of technical and design support, including a coming makeover to keep up with a procession of software updates. This adds up.

We don't charge for Jotwell and we don't run any ads, and we would like to keep it that way. If every Jotwell reader donated just $7 a year, we'd cover all of our costs...but alas not everyone is generous.

If you can afford it, please don't be a free rider. If you like us lots—or even just some—please make a small donation? Of course, if you want to make a large one, we would not say no to that either.

Thank you.

Yours sincerely,

A. Michael Froomkin
Jotwell Editor-in-Chief